How were the odds calculated?

To determine the odds for each match, we used a Poisson distribution with the following parameters: (i) the number of goals each team could score, and (ii) the expected number of goals (between 0 and 10) for each team based on their points difference in the FIFA rankings. This enables us to calculate the probability of the outcome of each match.

Example of odds calculation for Norway vs. France

Parameters

Goals per team per match (historical)1.4A

Statistical dispersion

For the Group Stage, you will have to fill the Player Template with the following information:

- Your prediction of the last 8 teams that will remain at the latest stages of the competition;
- Your prediction for each game of the Group Stage.

For the games predictions, you will see on the left part of the template the betting odds of each game result calculated based on the confrontation of each game. This betting odd will then be multiplied by the points awarded for a correct game result found (6 points), should you have correctly predicted the outcome.
